BOSSES

Finaflex: "Come taste some fin!

Having fallen on hard times and losing almost everything he owned during the great recession, Phineas Limbardo volunteered himself to science for financial gain. What was intended to be a miracle cure for psoriasis turned into disaster as Phineas found his body transformed into an almost unrecognizable man-shark thing. Changing his name to Finaflex, he finds stable employment with McRibs monitoring the city streets.

Giorgio: "Too bad your ride stops here!

Life was good for Vinny "Giorgio" Gambino. He owned a successful pet store where customers could "rescue" abandoned handheld digital pets from the 1990s and raise them for qualified tax credits. But then, without warning, tragedy struck as the battery market crashed leaving many specific models of batteries (the very same needed for his business), next to impossible to attain. Furious, Vinny joined with McRib and used his remaining funds to purchase an expensive and highly-detailed turtle suit to explore the sewers for new discarded treasure.

Puss: "Looks like you pre-ordered a fistful of frog punches!"

Pubert D. Rockafeller was an online celebrity during his tadpool years. Having achieved internet fame with his popular ViewTube videos reviewing high-end and exotic drink coasters, praise turned into rage as online viewers hated his biased review for a series of limited edition coasters for flys. Now an adult, Pubert has adopted a new name and works with McRib to fulfill his desire for revenge on the entire online community.

Punkachew: "You're about to be electrobeat!"

Looking to be the very best, the best there ever was, street hooligan Phileas Mortamor trained his body and mind in the lost art of electric kwon do. Though he mastered the sacred fighting style, his body changed as a result of his training. Now a living battery, his sacred fighting style was labeled too dangerous for normal people to learn leaving Phileas no longer relevant or interesting. He dwells in his dojo, ready to fight any trespassers who dare enter.

McRibs: "You've made it this far, so called Hero!"

Little is known about this enigmatic villain except for one thing. McRibs was a successful eTsy shop owner who, after a series of positive sales, broke down in a fit of rage over how ungrateful and disrespectful his customers were towards his large hand-made metal cylinder containers. Furious that his dream turned into nothing more than trash receptacles, McRibs launched a new campaign - terrorize the e-commerce establishment through violence, intimidation, and oddly-colored henchmen.
